Stroking stones, play animals and sculptures
– these are the concrete animals by the Danish designer Lissy Boesen.

Quote by Lissy Boesen:

Ideas arise while watching the creative play of children on sculptures, upended trees, big stones and similar objects. You can see how they almost automatically begin to climb. They play "cops and robbers" or make believe the stones are a fortress. However, places such as these can be dangerous to play on as they are often rough, sharp edged or have protruding pieces. Why not instead offer the children a concrete sculpture which allows them to develop their powers of imagination and fulfils their desire to climb without any danger of hurting themselves?

Play value

The gentleness of the play figures and the simplicity of the design allows observers to use their imagination. The calm expression of the concrete sculptures produces a peaceful atmosphere which invites children to deal lovingly with animals and the environment.

The stone animals can be integrated into role-play activities or the children can climb carefully on their back and sit or lie there. And above all: they can be touched, felt and stroked. Small children and particularly girls, also when they are a little older, enjoy and need this. And even adults enjoy the experience of touching the gentle curves and shapes.

Installation information

Surfacing requirements firm and level

Foundations

Foundations are usually not necessary for the big animals due to their heavy weight. If required, threaded bushes have been cast into the underside of all stroking stones for the purpose of installation.

Due to the high weight of the animals, it must be possible to access the location by means of a lifting machine.

Attention!

Exact measurements may vary, for all installation dimensions refer to current installation instructions.
